When jewelry designer Annoushka met eclectic Dutch artist Bouke de Vries they decided to work together to unite art and jewelry. In fact, de Vries' works of art will be shown for the entire month in Annoushka's London boutique in Cadogan Gardens. The Precious event, which features works made from pieces of broken ceramic that the artist has found all over the world, is meant to be the first of a series of several exhibitions that will bring together art and jewelry throughout the year.

The 'Art at Annoushka' project aims to offer new ways for sculptures, photographs and paintings to be shown alongside with the designer's precious, limited-edition creations. Bouke's 10 broken-ceramic sculptures have been decorated with gold butterflies and dragonflies, diamonds, semi-precious stones and good-luck charms in engraved pink gold, garnets and pearls.

For the occasion, Annoushka created an extravagant limited-edition (only 50 pieces) pendant: it's called Apple Core and it comes in gold, rubies, pink sapphires and cognac diamonds. It is the perfect complement to the All About Eve sculpture that Bouke has created with pieces of ceramic from the XIX and XX centuries.

From new eclectic jewels that mix pieces from different styles to jewels that represent Annoushka's work in the last 20 years, her boutique is also a refined showcase for a select group of designers, some of whom are more well-known than others. And you absolutely have to take a look at (and try on) the incredible oversized rings by Chinese designer Wendy Yue. This Hong Kong native who grew up in Vienna makes pieces that are intricate and imaginative. The tiny gold sculptures by sculptress Manuela Zervudachi are also must-see pieces. She has long been known for her large bronze sculptures and wanted to translate this passion for sculpting into something smaller - into miniature jewels in gold and diamonds. There are 24 limited-edition pieces on display.
